Marketing Plan: Miss America has forever been a woman of intellect, talent, and grace. To successfully market the Miss America "Brand" it is imperative to choose contributors who share in the core values of the Miss America Organization. My two years of work with E.Campus.com's promotional team have enabled me to develop and utilize successful marketing strategies and have allowed me to see the connection between effective marketing and organizational success. I am confident that my marketing experience along with my passion for this program will ensure that the Miss America Organization will continue to support women of intellect, talent, and grace for many years to come.

Legacy: My legacy will be one of health and happiness because healthy children are happy children. As Miss America it will be my mission to instill in children all across the country the value of healthy living through proper nutrition, physical activity, and health education. Additionally, I hope to encourage society to prioritize the health of America's youth and motivate them to continue preventing childhood obesity long after my year of service.

Why I should be Miss America this year: Miss America has always been a strong and vocal advocate for fitness. Now is the time for this organization to share its value of healthy living with today's youth in an effort to combat our country's obesity epidemic. As Miss America I will represent the Miss America Organization's commitment to fitness, utilize my collaboration with the American Obesity Association and the VERB program, and initiate national awareness of the prevention of childhood obesity.
